The company at first, when the contract was secured, agreed to furnish a guarantee bond of the work for five years. After the excavation was commenced it was found that no guaranty company would make a bond for more than a year. The company then proposed to give the bond for one year, and to renew it each year thereafter.

The Assembly thought that the company had acted fairly with the city, and that some extension should be granted. Whether or not the members of the Board will be of the same opinion is another question.

"My First Experience With a Telephone in My Home" will be the book of a prominent Manchesterian when the publisher finishes with it. The book will tell of the troubles that a rmm had after the had installed a phone in his house. Neighbors by the score came to his home and for minutes, yea, even hours, talked to their friends. They told all of their friends that there was a telephone in the neighborhood.

Afterwards there came negroes who labored under the belief that if they paid five cents they could talk as much as they wanted. They came in droves, and the religiously inclined citizen forgot that he had read in the Book that he should not swear. He forgot everything in fact, but he remembered and does remember yet, that he has it in for the next negro who wants to use his telephone, and there may be a funeral procession back of Maury Cemetery at any time.

At the government house banquet, Mr. At the government house banque, ar. Root was welcomed in a speech by Minister of Foreign Affairs Romeu, who expressed the contident belief that the visit of the American Secretary of State would mutually benefit the relations between the two countries. In replying Mr. Root said.

Root said:
"It is most gratifying to hear from the lips of one of the masters of South reality of international politics—so just an estimate of the attitude of my own

Monroe Doctrine.

"The great declaration of Monroe made in the infancy of Latin-American made in the infancy of Latin-American liberty, was an assertion to all the world of the competency of Latin-Americans to govern themselves and their countries. That assertion my country has always maintained; and my presence, here is in part for the purpose of giving evidence of her belief that the truth of the assistion has been demonstrated—that in the progressive development which attends the course of nations, the peoples of South America have proved that their national tendencies and capacities are, and will be, on and ever on in the path of order and liberty.

"I am here to learn more and also to demonstrate our belief in the substantial similarity of interests and sympathies of American self-governing republics. You have justly indicated that there is nothing in the growing friendship between our countries which imperits the interests of these countries in the old world from which we have drawn our language, our traditions and the basis of our customs and our leave. I think it may safely be said that these nations which planted their first colonies on these shores, and which we have spread so widely, have profited more from the independence of the American republics than they would have profited if their unwise system of colonial government had been continued. In the establishment of these free and independent nations in this continent they have obtained a profitable outlet for their trade, employment for their commerce, food for their people and refuge for their poor and their surplus populations.

Experimented for Them.

"We have done more than that. We have tried here use experiments in government for them. The reflex action of American experiments in government ernment for them. The releast actions of American experiments in government has been felt in every country in Europe without exception, and has been far more effective in its influence than any good quality of the old colonial system could have been, and now our prosperity but adds to their prosperity. Intercourse in trade and exchange of thought in learning, in literature, in art, all add to their powers and their prosperity, their intellectual activity, and their commercial strength. We still draw from their stores of wealth commercially, spiritually and intellectually,"
"We are beginning to return, and in a rich measure, with interest what we have got from them. We have learned that national aggrandizement and national prosperity are to be gained rather by national violetimes.

national friendship than by national violetwe.

"The friendship for your country that we from the North have is a friendship that imperils no interest of Europe; it is a friendship that springs from a desire to promote the common welfare of mankind by advancing the rule of order, of justice, of humanity and of the Christianity which makes for the prosperity
